NORTH SHORE HEALTH DEPARTMENT

February is "Teen Dating Violence Awareness and Prevention month"

Data from the 2013 WI Youth Risk Behavior Survey indicate that 11% of female students and 4% of male students report being forced, either verbally or physically, to take part in a sexual activity. Dating violence can happen to teens in a romantic or sexual relationship anytime, anywhere. It may occur in person or electronically and it might occur between a current or former dating partner. Dating violence can be prevented when teens, families, organizations, and communities work together to implement effective prevention strategies. Talking to teens about acceptable and unacceptable behaviors in relationships is critical to helping them understand what healthy, respectful relationships look like. Preteens and teens can learn interpersonal skills like conflict resolution, self-control and behavior regulation to navigate changing social dynamics and their own reactions to those changes. There are a number of resources available in WI and nationally to provide information and strategies to prevent teen dating violence.
